Americans are trapped in an endless cycle of work, buy, work, buy. This cycle has resulted in massive deforestation and a CO2 level that will change our planet's climate in potentially catastrophic ways. Annie Leonard, in her book The Story of Stuff, discusses the unsustainable cycle of American style consumer capitalism. She argues that the planet is running up against the limits of its resources and exploiting the planet and workers with devastating effects. Similarly, Naomi Klein in No Logo, illuminates the abuse of foreign and domestic workers as corporations seek every greater profits and cheaper products. American consumerism has resulted in abuses to the environment and workers all in the name of "more."
